Personal details of unsuccessful job applicants are actively retained for six months after an appointment has been made. This is so that we would be able to contact these people should the same or an alternative vacancy arise in that time period.

It is our normal practice to destroy/delete records in larger batches rather than on a piecemeal basis for practical purposes to avoid mistakes being made and to ensure confidentiality in destruction. Therefore, we would expect that all personal records of unsuccessful job applicants would be destroyed/deleted within twelve months of our final correspondence with that person.

If you have any queries about how your information will be used or stored, please contact Peter Robertson - operations@hebronhall.org or 029 2051 5665.
